

Make Love Your Aim

by Philip H. Carver

Make love your aim.
Make it your daily claim.
Make love your aim.
Don't be too fast to put others to shame.
There's nothing too hard about finding anyone to blame.
So make love your aim.

You can speak in tongues
at the top of your lungs,
share your brand new knowledge
of what you learned in college,
but all you succeed in doing is spreading your fame.

So make love your aim.
Make it your daily claim.
Make love your aim.
Don't be too fast to put others to shame.
There's nothing too hard about finding anyone to blame.
So make love your aim.

You can give all you own
up to God as a loan, claim you're moving mountains
by faith for heavens fountains,
but all you are really doing is playing a game.
So make love your aim.

So make love your aim.
Make it your daily claim.
Make love your aim.
Don't be too fast to put others to shame.
There's nothing too hard about finding anyone to blame.
So make love your aim.
So make love your aim.
So make love your aim.

Love is patient. Love is kind.
When it doesn't get its way, love doesn't mind.
Love bears, believes, hopes, endures all things.
Love never ends, no matter what life brings.

So make love your aim.
So make love your aim.
Make it your daily claim.
Make love your aim.
Don't be too fast to put others to shame.
There's nothing too hard about finding anyone to blame.
So make love your aim.
So make love your aim.
So make love your aim.
